Here are the three goats: one little, one middle-sized, and one very big.

They want to eat the green grass across the river, but there is a troll under the bridge.

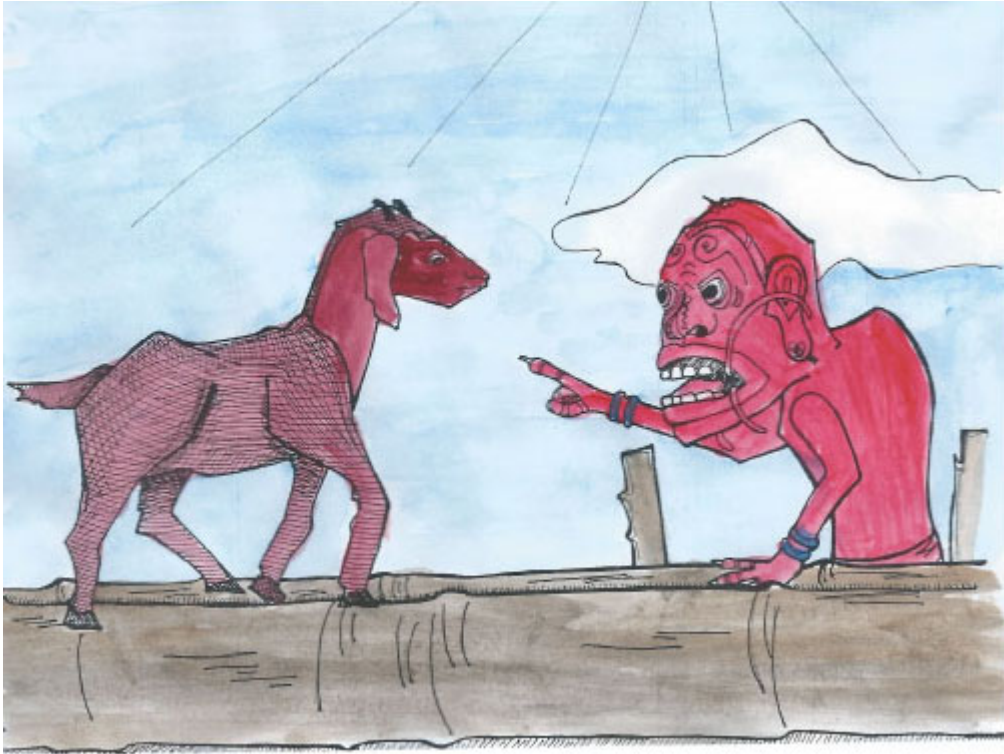

The little goat walks over the bridge. "Who's that walking over my bridge? I'm going to eat you," says the troll.

The little goat replies, "I'm too small. Wait for my bigger brother."

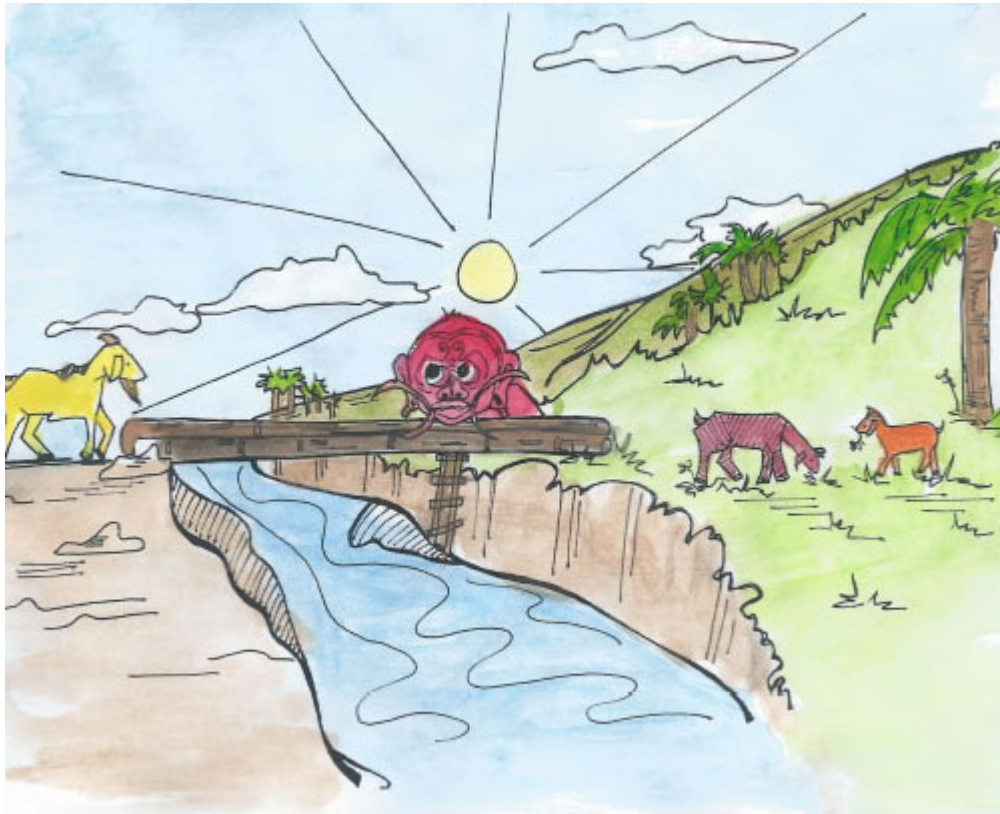

The little goat goes across and eats the delicious green grass. The troll waits under the bridge.

The middle-sized goat walks over the bridge. "Who's that walking over my bridge? I'm going to eat you," says the troll.

The middle-sized goat replies, "I'm too small. Wait for my brother, who is very big."

The middle-sized goat and little goat eat the delicious green grass. The troll waits under the bridge.

The very big goat walks over the bridge. "Who's that walking over my bridge? I'm going to eat you," says the troll.

The very big goat pushes the troll, and he falls into the river.

The three goats are happy, because the troll never comes back again.
