

Sea Change

Change is whispering across the sand and threatening Tutu's home. Can Maku help Tutu move on?

Sea Change
Jo Vosailagi

Let's Read

 The Asia Foundation

Something wet licked Maku's toes.
"Go away, Dog!" Maku mumbled sleepily. It licked his toes again.
"I said, go away," Maku grumbled.

Maku stood up and rubbed his eyes.
Hmmm! Now, where was that naughty dog? And why did his toes feel wet?

Maku looked down at his feet in surprise.
“Tutu, Tutu!” he shouted. “Why is there water splashing through the floor?”

Tutu appeared at the door. He looked sad.
"It's the sea, Maku," he said. "It's the sea."

Maku rushed outside to look.
Small waves were whispering over the sand and playing around the feet of the old house.

“What are we going to do?” asked Maku. “Could we build a wall to keep the sea away?”

Tutu shook his head.

“That’s a good idea,” he said. “But I think it’s too late for my little house.” Tutu sighed a big sigh.

“We’re going to have to leave our home, Maku,” he said.

Maku was sad.
'Why do things have to change?' he wondered.
He reached out and gently took Tutu's big hand. They stood together quietly and just looked at the sea.

"I have lived here ever since I was a small boy, Maku," said Tutu quietly. "Look, I carved my name here when I was your age."

“And over here ... this is the palm tree I used to climb.

”Maku looked up at Tutu and smiled.

“Don’t worry, Tutu,” he whispered. “I’ll help you pack all your things. We can build you another house.”

Suddenly, Maku had an idea.

“Look!” he said. “Maybe we could build a little house up there, Tutu.”
He pointed up the hill.

“Just think. It would be lovely to live up there. We could still see the sea, but it wouldn’t be able to lick our toes any more.”

“You could sit in the shade under the trees. We could plant some flowers beside the house. And we could grow pawpaw and eggplants and chilies,” he added excitedly.

Tutu went back and looked at the flowers outside his house. Then he looked up the hill toward the trees.

He gave Maku's hand a squeeze.

"I think you're right Maku," he said. "I think my flowers would be much happier living up there. I don't think they like this salty water very much."

Tutu grabbed a suitcase.

“Well then young man,” he said, “if we are going to move, we had better get busy.”

Maku smiled a big smile.

“Our new house will be beautiful, Tutu. I know it will. And maybe I will still be living up there when I am an old man,” he said.

Tutu laughed, “Maybe you will, Maku. Maybe you will.”

And Maku did.

Questions

Rising sea levels are bringing changes to Tutu's village. What other changes do you see?

Which changes are positive?

Which changes are negative?

Which changes are both?

Brought to you by

Let's Read is an initiative of The Asia Foundation's Books for Asia program that fosters young readers in Asia and the Pacific.

booksforasia.org To read more books like this and get further information, visit letsreadasia.org.

Original Story Sea Change, Author: Jo Vosailagi. Illustrator: Ropate Kama. Published by The Asia Foundation - Let's Read, <https://www.letsreadasia.org> © The Asia Foundation - Let's Read.

Released under CC-BY-NC-4.0.

This work is a modified version of the original story. © The Asia Foundation, 2022. Some rights reserved. Released under CC-BY-NC-4.0.

For full terms of use and attribution,

<http://creativecommons.org/licenses/by-nc/4.0/>